The international debate on Afghanistan in recent months has been dominated by the proposed so-called "Shiite law", which has caused international outrage, and by the renewed brutal attacks by the Taliban against women's rights activists. Against this background and in the light of the complexities of the Afghan society, today's event aims to provide a platform to leading Afghan women's rights activists with a view to examining the situation of women in Afghanistan, their role in achieving progress and, more in general, the challenges in empowering women in Afghanistan.

The debate will be in English and German. Please find detailed information about the speakers and organisers below.

KALIMA

KALIMA would like to promote the dialogue between Afghanistan and Germany. Since the end of the Taliban regime many German organisations and institutions have invested in the development of a free press in Afghanistan. KALIMA would like to give this generation of journalists the chance to consolidate their trade by producing of reports, contributions and background information on-site and to inform the German public first hand about culture, society and religion. Germany has become important to the Afghans not least since the deployment of the German armed forces and the resulting increase in safety across the country. Considering that intercultural dialogue is now more important than ever before, this initiative can be seen as basis for further development and collaboration. KALIMA aims to show foreign values, attitudes and opinions in their context. A direct insight into each other's culture should allow a more differentiated perception.
